Frequently Asked Questions

How much job seeker traffic does SanDiegoCareers.com get?

Traffic varies for each site in the HomeTown Careers Network. On average, each site delivers over 2,000 page views per day, and is growing.

What type of job seekers are they?

Local job seekers. On average, about 80% of the resumes submitted to SanDiegoCareers.com are within the Greater San Diego Area.

What types of jobs are they looking for?

We attract a broad range of occupations from technical to financial to sales and most other major job categories. While SanDiegoCareers.com visitors tend to be mainly professional workers, an increasing percentage of entry-level workers are now able to access the Internet.

How do you attract your job seeker traffic?

Because SanDiegoCareers.com provides job seekers with free, direct links to major local employers, candidates can find jobs in their local area, applying directly to the companies they choose. This strategy earns us excellent relevance in search engine queries — plus inbound links from hundreds of other websites including universities, other jobs boards, local guide sites, personal sites and more.

What other promotion do you do?

Our model provides over 90% of our traffic from search engines, links from other sites, and word of mouth. We continue to run promotions including online promotions, career fairs, magazine ad partnering, and occasional public radio and TV interviews in targeted local markets.

How can I track the cost-effectiveness of SanDiegoCareers.com?

In your My Company account, you can review the number of applications for each of your jobs, listings, or ads. Job seekers apply directly to you, using either their saved resume in their personal account, or applying directly to you through your web pages. For this reason, we recommend that you include a "source" field in your online application form to track these additional job seekers.

What is the difference between a Featured Employer Listing and a Featured Job Posting?

The featured employer listing links job seekers directly to the jobs web pages on your corporate site. Job seekers apply directly to you for jobs on your web site. Featured Job Postings are jobs you post directly to the SanDiegoCareers.com home page and employer listing page, so job seekers can apply directly to you for that job. You can also include an optional link in each posting to your jobs web pages.
